

Jeremiah Young

Jeremiah Young is a Sydney based actor with a deep affection for Jesus, racquet sports, and tearing up the dance floor. Growing up in Newcastle, he tried just about everything you could think of. Football, Tae Kwon Do, Public Speaking, Swimming, Singing, Volleyball, Chess, Piano, Bass Guitar, and Tennis - all with varying levels of success. Ultimately, he found his love of performing through being heavily involved in his school's musicals. He took up classical singing throughout high school, but decided he'd stick with acting after it became clear he wasn't a tenor. Straight out of high school, Jeremiah had the opportunity to go on a short-term mission trip to Fiji, where he spent weeks with the poorest communities in the country, laughing, grieving, singing, sharing Jesus with them, and physically labouring for them. This has tremendously impacted him and the trajectory of his life. Since then, Jeremiah has trained with Sydney Actors School from 2024 - 2025 under industry professionals Rebecca Johnston, Pip Edwards, Garth Holcombe, Lyn Pierse, Felix Williamson and many others. He was stoked to play the wonderful Ted Noffs in his graduating production "Wayside Bride", under the astute direction of Anna Houston, adding 'Methodist Heresy and the people of 1970s King's Cross' to his arsenal of deep topics to talk about over a Guinness. Whether it be in Newcastle, Sydney, or Fiji, Jeremiah is on about peace and hope, and will do what he can to give that to people all over.