

BIO - David Carfora

Drawn to the performing arts as a youth, David quickly found himself with the passionate drive of being able to bring characters to life and drawing in audiences within the world of each story and its emotional journey.

Having studied at numerous schools such as Brave Studios, Tafta and 16th street and being mentored by seasoned performers like Damien Walsh Howling, Lindel Green, Andy Mcphee and Jasper Bagg, has certainly guided David to have been fortunate enough to work on many productions ranging from independent films like "Nobody's Home" where he portrayed the supporting role of Ray Connolly, a Psychologist who is integral to the story and evolution of the main character and short films like "You Don't Belong To Me" and "The Pact", where he played two different main characters, Benji the gangster and Wesley a socially awkward accountant trying to overcome his shyness for a women he likes.

David is a Big lover of life and loves to travel, experiencing new cultures and people so he can better himself as a person. He draws a lot of inspiration from comic books, looking up to characters like captain America, Superman and Spider-Man for their courage and fight to help others in need and that even in failure there is a lesson to be learned, to be better, to always grow and keep learning. When not working, David enjoys doing Artistic Art Design for his friends and family, who are a big part of his life and who have influenced the variety of different genres he loves such as Drama, Westerns, Action, Thriller, Romantic Dramas, Comedy, Comic Book Movies or even a good Anime.
