

Brodie Agutter is a Brisbane-based actor whose commanding presence, emotional intensity, and grounded authenticity have positioned him as a compelling emerging talent for both the Australian and international screen industry. Known for portraying layered anti-heroes, dangerous villains, tactical operators, police, and deeply human father figures, he brings a rare blend of cinematic strength and emotional truth to every role.

His screen work includes the award-winning web series Ruff and Ruby, where he delivered a standout performance as Curly, alongside Hard Knock Life as Connor, the upcoming crime drama White Collar portraying an undercover police officer, and the lead role in the short film Kill Truth (Lord Bellium). Whether embodying authority, vulnerability, or quiet menace, Brodie is drawn to characters shaped by pressure, loyalty, sacrifice, and internal conflict.

Before stepping fully into acting, Brodie served in the Australian Army Armoured Corps as an ASLAV gunner/driver and combat medic, deploying to Afghanistan in 2011 and Iraq in 2018. Those experiences forged the discipline, resilience, and emotional depth that now define his work on screen. His military background allows him to bring an exceptional level of realism and instinct to tactical, action, and first responder roles rarely matched within the industry.

Dedicated to the craft, Brodie has trained with some of Australia's leading acting coaches and institutions, including Chris Sommers at The Factory, Andrew Buchanan, NIDA, TAFTA, Helen Howard, mentor Joey Vieira, and renowned dialect coach Susan Bell. His work combines disciplined technical training with raw emotional accessibility, creating performances that feel powerful, lived-in, and deeply authentic.

With a strong physicality and naturally cinematic presence, Brodie is well suited to a wide range of genres including crime thrillers, prestige drama, action, war films, psychological thrillers, neo-westerns, dystopian and sci-fi projects, political dramas, noir, fantasy, and grounded character-driven stories. Equally capable of playing intimidating antagonists, morally conflicted leads, loyal best friends, military personnel, detectives, bikers, blue-collar workers, or emotionally burdened fathers, he brings credibility and emotional weight to every frame.

Off screen, Brodie is a devoted family man, soccer coach, and passionate fan of Formula 1, Warhammer, fitness training, and literature — interests that continue to fuel his creativity, focus, and understanding of character.

With lived experience few actors possess and a growing body of emotionally charged work, Brodie Agutter is establishing himself as a powerful new face for high-end television, streaming platforms, and cinematic storytelling on the global stage.
