A documentary taking the mickey out of influencers and fashion bloggers at fashion week is doing the rounds on Facebook.

Vita and Michael Carbone, co-creators of the video believe that the fictional blogger Delilah taps into our growing obsession and fascination with social influencers and our own public profile.

Australian Fashion Week might be done and dusted for another year, but the laughs keep on coming thanks to the video series, 'Real Bloggers Of Sydney'.

Created by Vita Carbone and Michael Carbone, 'Real Bloggers Of Sydney' chronicles the adventures of "fashion bloggers" such as "Delilah Hayley-Huges Jones" as they navigate the stiletto-stacked, sometimes pleb-filled waters of events such as Fashion Week.

'I am a Gemini raw vegan yogi blogger': Hilarious video parodies the stereotypical Fashion Week attendee - complete with a 'glam squad' and a dog named Coco Chanel

Girl Posting Photos From Fashion Week In No Way Employed By The Fashion Industry

Delilah Hayley-Hughes Jones has never once made a dollar from modeling, writing about, or designing fashion.

However, she does have week-long media passes to the Mercedes-Benz Fashion Week in Sydney.

Followers of her apparent blog have not only been made aware of the fact that she has spent the last 72 hours floating around the Sydney Opera House and CarriageWorks event centre, but they also now know the names of every designer responsible for her outfits.

“She must be doing a couple outfit changes a day” says one bloke, who began following her after spotting a few bikini photos in his newsfeed over summer.

“What’s she doing there? We’d know if she was on the runway by now”

“What does she do anyway?”

Delilah belongs to the collective of unemployed journalism graduates that make up the ‘Real Bloggers Of Sydney’ Instagram account –

Inner-City Leftie Prepares Self For Annual Care About Equine Welfare Day

As the gambling addicted, court suit-wearing, fascinator-adoring men and women of Australia prepare themselves for the most important sickie of the year tomorrow, there's one corner of the Australian online community preparing themselves for a different kind of day out.

And that is, one spent entirely indoors, keyboard at the ready, to let the world at large know that horse racing is evil, and anyone who supports it should see what it's like to wear a saddle and be whipped accordingly

And while confining the airing of equine-related grievances to that fateful first Tuesday of November has had little to no impact in the past, Betoota resident Jane Oaksfield is one of literally dozens who aren't going to let the previous few years of mostly ignored hashtag-fuelled Facebook statuses slow her down.

"Enough is enough," Oaksfield began via messenger to the Advocate earlier today, taking a break from dusting off last year's soapbox in preparation for tomorrow's social media bombardment.
